Syracuse Herald. For the last twenty years David Jenin operation for several days in the Evans house. The workings of the machine have been witnessed by at least a thous and people, representing points as far distant as Philadelphia, New York, Boston and Chicago. At the time the Herald's reporter and artist visited Mr. Jennings at his model-room and workshop he said he had numerous offers of fabulous sum:

In the center of the room stands the ninety-seventh model that Mr. Jennings has experimented upon. The inventor was not losth to allow an examination of the machine, and he proceeded to set his motor in motion.

The machine is suspended in a wooded frame about six feet long, two feet wide, and seven feet high, and is in the form of an endless chain which runs in the figure of a triangle over three pulleys, leaving three spaces or grades to pass over, one going down, another up, and a third about on a level. The line traversed is nearly like the framework of a harp proposed by New York is likely to find standing upright. The down line of the chain is nearly as long as the other two. The links are about two inches in length, and are almost in the shape of a The last stage robbery between San triangle. At the top of the frame is located the main pulley, over which the chain runs. It is attached to a small which, Mr. Jennings said, could be made

The links of the chain are so made with around the two sides of the triangle, the inventor says. The main pulley-wheel on top is composed of two disks, upon the outer edge of which rest the axles which run through the links of the chain, and which it supports as the chain runs over the wheel. The chain must be properly hooked by hand before it can be started on its first perpetual motion tour, it is said. It is claimed that the machine now on exhibition is about one-tenth

To start the motor Mr. Jennings removed a small pin located on an upper corner of the frame, and apparently the chain started off on its triangular tour without any power, and gradually gained momentum. Mr. Jennings stepped to the opposite side of the frame and regulated the motion with a small brake.

"It has been twenty-one years since I built my first model to try and solve the perpetual motion problem," said Mr. Jennings, 'and since that time I have spent Jennings, and since that time I have spent more than $40,000 in my experiments. I have built ninety-seven models, and experimented on more than sixty different principles."
